DEDICATION

This research study is dedicated to all families affected, in both challenging and uplifting ways, by Autism Spectrum Disorders.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The authors would like to heartily thank the dissertation committee for their insight, patience, and support throughout this process.

The authors would also like to acknowledge the Curry Autism Spectrum Disorders Research Group, without whose support this research would not be possible.

The authors would also like to thank the Simons Foundation for Autism Research Initiative (SFARI) for offering an exceptionally clean database of genetic and phenotypic information from which researchers can operate in order to contribute empirical knowledge to the ever-growing field of Autism Spectrum Disorders.

The first author communicated and collaborated with Michael Hull at great length during the data analyses phase of the research, for which she is particularly grateful. The first author would also like to thank Jordan Wade for her tireless efforts towards the timely completion of the second and third manuscripts.
